mile circular walk through the estate, linking Emmetts and Chartwell, and, the Octavia Hill trail.

The site of Chartwell has changed many times since the Middle Ages. In the late 18th century it was used as a foundling house, a home for deserted children. It provided gardening and farm work for the occupants. It was known as Well Street and wasn't called Chartwell until the mid 19th century taking its name from the Chart Well, a spring feeding the uppermost of the series of ponds to the north of the house. The word Chart is Old English for a rough common overgrown with gorse, broom and bracken. At the core of the present Chartwell are the remains of a 16th century house with substantial roof timbers and storey heights.

One quote from Churchill 'History will be kind to me, for I intend to write it'. He wrote 43 books, including a six volume account of the Second World War. In addition to his historical and political books he also wrote one novel, Savrola, published in 1900.

Chartwell was passed to the National Trust in 1966 after Churchill's death.
